Honorable mention: Indoor-outdoor living

Project: Mackey-Yaseen single-family residence, Tucson, AZ

What we love: The northern facade of the this 875-square-foot addition has a deep roof overhang, creating sheltered outdoor space that can be used year-round.

Design: Worker, Inc., Tucson (520/664-4847)

i love the clean lines and streamline style. it is so uncomplicated and simple that it is instant relaxation upon arrival. open air living with a nearby indoor warm retreat is cozy.

The design of this house would blend into any forest landscape with minimal disruption of the natural environment. I would definitely consider building this house on the right piece of property.

ALTHOUGH THE SPACES ARE GREAT & INNOVATIVE,THE RAW MATERIALS UTILIZED FOR BUILDING THESE STRUCTURES ARE NOT ECO-FRIENDLY IN MY OPINION.DUE TO NEEDLESS DEFORRESTATION AND DISPLACEMENT OF WILD LIFE,WHILE OTHER RESOURCES ARE AVAILABLE,IT JUST ALL SEEMS SO SENSELESS.

On a recent visit to this house, I found everything about it cold, harsh, uncomfortable, lifeless. No color. No warmth. No soul. No where to flop or relax. What a cramped bathroom! ridiculous placement of the toilet! An equally stiff kitchen. Who could enjoy walking around the isle every time a pan is needed? Totally *. Cables inside, ridiculous! the outside fireplace is a joke! 3 rivers people sit around fire rings w/their feet, hands, entire bodies close to the heat! Nothing natural, earthy or earthy about this place. All sharp lines and squares; no curves or flow. And what an ugly fence! Very disappointing to me that Sunset Magazine so misleads its readers into thinking this is such a fabulous place when it's totally out of place in the country.
